Judge Review

Both MRT station and wide open Nanyuan Park contribute to this entry's innate advantages. The three sides of the building face roads and its connecting-to-sidewalk rear retreated space provides friendly urban shortcut for residents in the L-shaped-road community. The 6x12m Multi-function space is worth encouraging.

Judge Review

The elements of bridges and water flow in the forest are properly integrated into this building's design, allowing it to provide leisure, comfort and elegant landscape. The overall public open space is able to block noise; its energy-saving green concept is in line with the carbon reduction design; and its intact backyard buffer space provides both disaster prevention and leisure function. This building is a model for Taichung open landscape space.

Judge Review

This building retreats seven meters to provide shadowy trails. Besides, it reserves about 45% (240 pings) base floor area as an open space, the so-called "urban oasis." Not only does the refined park serve as an excellent leisure spot, its endeavor to divide public space from private space corresponds to Taichung city original intention of building design. That's why this entry is indeed a role model.

Judge Review

This entry devotes much effort to public open space. It fully integrates public art, multilevel greening and resident interaction. The combination of the surrounding open space and neighboring buildings unselfishly creates green space for co-sharing nature, ecology and art. It is eligible to be a model with its high quality and cultural atmosphere.
